Gary Anderson wins third Heart and Hands Award

By Ryan Hall

When the economy falters, contributions to even the most worthy causes may drop off.

However, Gary Anderson, who graduated in 1978 with an accounting degree from USU, is one alumnus who feels now is not the time to pull back support.

"I think this is when philanthropists need to step up," said Anderson. "You try to look for more that you can do."

In December 2008, Anderson received the Heart and Hands Award for the third time. The award is sponsored by the Utah Nonprofits Association and the Utah Society of Fund Raisers. It recognizes people who make significant contributions through their volunteer or philanthropic service.

Anderson contributes to the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business National Advisory Board Scholarship, the Big Blue Scholarship and the Huntsman School of Business Dean's Fund.

Anderson came up with the idea to host an Entrepreneur Day or eDay each year and he has been a major supporter of the event since he founded it. This year eDay has become eWeek and, in addition to the Elevator Pitch competition, it will feature a new "Business Creation Event." The event will give students the chance to compete in a 72-hour contest that will test each team's ability to promote and sell a product or service based on a common item such as a water bottle. The Elevator Pitch competition gives students a chance to pitch their best ideas to a panel of successful entrepreneurs and win cash to help get their ventures off the ground.

The eDay event, which is organized by the USU Entrepreneur Club, exposes students to entrepreneurial experiences, opens them to new possibilities and helps them better understand the free enterprise system. The event also gives students an opportunity to interact with successful entrepreneurs, like Anderson, on a one-on-one basis.

Anderson also serves on the National Advisory Board for the Huntsman School of Business, the Advisory Board for the Athletic Department and is the chairman of the Entrepreneurial Founders' Board.

"I got my degree and that got me a job," Anderson said. "I just feel I owe something to those who have helped me along the way."

New scholarship honors Ross Robson, benefits students

The man who is credited with building the Shingo Prize's national reputation is still working to give students a competitive edge despite the fact that he is no longer on campus.

Ross Robson retired from his position as executive director of the organization that is now called the Shingo Prize for Operational Excellence in 2008. The Jon M. Huntsman School of Business has established the Ross & DaNece Robson Scholarship in Lean Management to recognize Robson's contributions. The Shingo Prize and the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business contributed $100,000 to get the scholarship started, with the hope that Professor Robson's many admirers will contribute to its growth and maintenance. The scholarship will be targeted at students who are interested in making "lean" a part of their educational focus.

The lean philosophy was originally articulated by Shigeo Shingo, an industrial engineer in Japan whose teachings have been key to Toyota's success. In 1988 he came to USU and was recognized with an honorary doctorate in business. The Shingo Prize organization was created not long after that visit.

"I'm pleased to see this scholarship established," Robson said. "I want to see students have the opportunity to make a study of lean principles part of their curriculum. The application of lean can benefit companies, organizations and government entities by helping them become more efficient and profitable. That's something this struggling economy desperately needs."

Robson said that when he was at USU he saw students benefit from their work with the Shingo Prize. Some made high-level connections at Shingo conferences that led to work with major companies such as Toyota, Ford and Boeing. Many students have gained a competitive edge from their lean training at USU.

Since retiring, Robson has founded DnR Lean, LLC, a consulting firm, and is a representative with Autoliv Lean Consulting. He is working on two books with previous Shingo Prize companies about applying lean principles.

Those interested in donating to the Ross & DaNece Robson Scholarship in Lean Management may phone McKenzie Rees at 435-797-2449, or contact her via email at mckenzie.rees@usu.edu.

Betty and Steve Stokes

have been contributing to help out single mothers reentering USU for years now.

Steve said they get to meet those they help and have been impressed with how dedicated these women are to their children, to the "process of advancing themselves" and with how much they want to set an example for their children about the value of education.

"I don't understand how a single mother going back to school can raise children, study and earn enough money to pay for their schooling," he said. "We have a place in our heart for these women and we'd like to see if we can help them."

They started donating through the Cache Valley Chamber of Commerce that has a program that promotes women in business. Scholarship recipients, who are selected by an independent committee, can get up to two-years of assistance if they qualify for it. Steve said they admire the determination

Two Huntsman alumni fund scholarships for single women

Two brothers who attended USU together and started their own company while at the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business, are now paying for four scholarships each year that help single mothers get through school.

Steve and Betty Stokes and Ross and JoAnn Stokes

these women have to push forward and get their education despite the obstacles.

"These people aren't looking for hand outs," Steve said. "They are just looking for a hand up. They want to do the best they can. We recognize that we are just scratching the surface. You'd like to be able to help every one of those reentry mothers."

Steve and Ross started Stokes Brothers while they were at the Jon M. Huntsman School of Business, a company that initially rented out used TVs to college students. Steve, who graduated with a bachelor's degree in marketing with a minor in economics in 1972, is now the CEO of Structured Finance Corporation, d.b.a. as Team Properties and Finance. Betty attended USU in 1985 and, with Steve, has raised two children. They now have six grandchildren.

Ross got his bachelor's degree in business administration in 1975. Ross now owns a private finance company.

A team of Huntsman students prepared a Real Estate proposal last year as part of the Utah Real Estate Challenge for the possible development of a piece of Logan property owned by Steve, and the Huntsman team won first place. The students received $20,000 for their winning efforts. Steve said he and Betty also contribute to Enterprise Mentors International, a non-profit organization that provides business training, mentoring and microfinance services to struggling entrepreneurs in developing nations.

True blue Aggies waste no time in giving back to USU

Brady and Andrea Murray have only been out of school since 2005, but they have already begun contributing to establish an endowed scholarship to help those who will follow them.

Brady graduated in 2005 with a bachelor's degree in accounting and Andrea graduated from USU in 2003 with a bachelor's degree in physical education and a minor in sociology.

Brady said that he and his wife have always planned on giving back as soon as they were able. Many have influenced them over the years, and they would like to mentor and help someone else. Brady said they are starting now, while they are young, and plan to continue to contribute so that they can build an endowment that will prove a blessing to others in the future.

Brady works as a certified financial planner and associate manager for the Beneficial Financial Group. Andrea, who is active in community service, cares for a three-year-old, Brynlee, and a one-year-old, Nash, who has Down's syndrome. The Murray's also volunteer to support the Special Olympics.

They now live in Boise, Idaho, where Brady has become "a very vocal Aggie fan up here amidst a lot of Boise State fans."

"Oh, I'll tell you what, there is no question, I'm true-blue, die-hard Aggie," he said.
